

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An electric machine includes a heat-generating machine component, and a temperature radiation detector for contactless determination and/or measurement of heat radiating from the machine component for ascertaining an absolute and current temperature of the machine component. In this way, the electric machine can be operated at maximum power, without experience overheating.